to the spirit of the law is forcibly declared in decisions of the highest courts of this and other States, as well as of England, whose insultations might be thought to encourage such conditions far more than our own.

Your Committee rendlim the view expressed in their furner reports that the combination herein described is contrary to public policy, and dangerous to the interests of the State and the welfare of its people.

It is to be noted that little if any advince has thus far been made in that size of anthracite coal which enters largely into competition with the letturnium preduct, and it is suggested in the testimony that any advance in that particular size of a general advance beyond extrain limits would result in the introduction into general use of bituminous coal.

This it is believed, would be for the
